of the fiscal year.

"In recommending that various sums shall be covered into the Treasury," said a report filed with the bill, "the committee does not mean to affirm in any sense that the total of moneys left with various bureaus is needed or should be expended, or to approve or disapprove of various activities. There should and doubtless will be large savings made form these balances.

"The bill conveys into the treasury great sums voted to the army and navy for the prosecution of the war and now made unnecessary for expenditure due to the signing of the army and thorizations has been confined to the military and naval establishments not because funds voted to other departments are all required, for such is by no means the fact, but because the magnitude of the task made impossible at this time a review of other departments and it is hoped that in connection with other bills that many of these surplus funds may be dealt with.

Ample Funds Planned

"What the committee has endeavored to do is to cover into the treasury sums that plainly are not needed, but as it is necessarily uncertain just to what extent the government may be able by cancellation of contracts and discontinuance of of projects to reduce its obligations the committee has deemed it wise to leave funds amply sufficient to meet such obligations.

"The labors of the committee have been greatly added to because of the absence of any modern or uniform system of keeping accounts by the various departments, and it desires to express the rope that Congress may provide soon for such a system of accounting."

The largest savings were from the quartermaster department of the army, which gives up $3.740.385.307 in cash and $15,750.000 in authorizations.

Some Navy Cash Savings

The navy cash savings included ordnance, $164,833,843; aviation, $98,000,000; navigation bureau, $4,500,000; supplies and accounts, $23,096,000, and marine corps, $41,216,866.

In the deficiencies that are provided for by the bill the navy receives $280,762,225, most of which is for pay and provisions for its men. It also receives $33,000,000 for liabilities insured in the rush work of construction of destroyers. The War Department receives $6,473.782, to meet deficiencies in pay of temporary civilian employes and for other purposes.
